FOR NEW CLIENTS: TERMS OF REPRESENTATION

We are pleased to have been asked to represent you, and we look forward to an enjoyable, successful, and trouble-free professional relationship. The Rules of Professional Conduct, however, impose certain obligations on attorneys. One in particular, the rule governing joint legal representation, should be addressed even before our first meeting.

Joint representation of spouses is common in estate planning. It generally reduces expenses and facilitates the coordination of a couple's estate plans. Nevertheless, conflicts of interest may occasionally arise. For example, it may be recommended that property be transferred between spouses or that confidential information be revealed. A lawyer representing spouses jointly cannot conceal information from either, take action for one spouse detrimental to the other, or even terminate representation of one spouse without advising the other. Please communicate with us before returning this Questionnaire if you wish separate representation.

We agree to proceed on the basis of joint representation, pending the future approval by us and DD&C of a full engagement agreement:

Thank you. If your situation is complex, if there are documents to review, or if there are particular issues you would like your DD&C attorney to consider in advance of your meeting, please send this Questionnaire and existing documents to your attorney before you meet. Otherwise, please simply bring it to your first meeting. In any event, we will need both your signatures above before your situation may be discussed.

As most clients come to us by referral, we like to thank our sources. Please let us know who referred you to this firm: _____
